INTRODUCTION TO SECOND EDITION.

The present edition differs considerably from the original one. Some time ago a friend, whose opinion, both from his knowledge of the language and from his experience as a teacher, carried the greatest possible weight, told me that he thought students found it very wearisome to toil through the vast number of unconnected sentences that these Exercises contained. I therefore determined that in the next edition, without destroying the general plan and character of the work, I would as far as possible substitute or introduce longer passages. The attempt to do this has proved a much more serious task than I had anticipated, and has involved the entire re-casting of more than half the book. But I shall not regret the labour, if the change proves satisfactory from the point of view of the student. There are one or two other alterations, of minor importance, which experience in using the book made me think would be improvements. There is also an increase in the number of exercises.

PREFACE.

At the present day most students of Chinese, before applying themselves to the Literary or Documentary Language, devote a good deal of time to the Spoken Language, which they learn with the aid of manuals and exercise books. In so doing they acquire the knowledge of a considerable number of written Chinese words, or characters. Thus equipped, they are able satisfactorily to commence their attack upon whatever book they may choose for the purpose of initiating themselves into the mysteries of Literary Chinese.

But very different is the position of the learner who wishes to begin his studies with the written language, and sets to work on, perhaps, the Classics, or, perhaps, a collection of Despatches, with absolutely no knowledge of any characters beyond the radicals. He is bewildered by the number of new words that he meets with in every line. He is not merely unable to grasp properly the construction of the sentences before him; but he is also hindered by the multiplicity of strange forms from learning even the characters themselves. It is specially to aid the beginner who wishes to go straight to the literary language, that these Exercises have been compiled; though it is hoped that other students may be able to work through them with advantage.

The written language of China comprises several different styles, from that of the ancient classics, on which all the others are founded, down to the documentary or business style, used for official writings at the present day. The earlier Exercises contain a good many examples taken from simple passages in the classics. But the later Exercises belong distinctly to the modern documentary style, which is the branch that must be studied by every one who wishes to make practical use of the learning that he acquires.

The Exercises are progressive, commencing with the commonest characters and the simplest of sentences. In each of them the learner is introduced to a limited number of new words, never, except towards the end of the book, more than fourteen or fifteen at one time. If he will be content to proceed slowly, and to fix thoroughly in his memory every new character as he comes to it, he will find, when he reaches the end of the book, that without serious difficulty he has furnished himself with a considerable stock of simple words, and can proceed profitably to some more advanced work. Now that the long-expected new edition of Sir Thos. Wade's Documentary Course has appeared, it will be exactly what he requires. While studying this or whatever other work he may select, he is recommended at the same time to read carefully through Dr. Hirth's Notes on the Chinese Documentary Style. These Notes are very valuable; but it would be a waste of time to peruse them before some progress in the language has been made. It will be seen that use has been made of Dr. Hirth's book several times in the explanatory notes attached to the Exercises in this volume.

I. INTRODUCTORY CHAPTER.

I. SPELLING.

For spelling Chinese words I have employed the system invented by Sir Thos. Wade. It represents the pronunciation heard in Peking. The system is not faultless; but it is the one most widely used, and is generally considered the best existing.

2. PRONUNCIATION.

These Exercises have not been compiled with the object of teaching any one to speak Chinese. But as the learner must pronounce the Chinese words in some manner, it will be well for him to attempt to do so with a moderate degree of accuracy. To assist him in this, a table of sounds is given below. As will be understood, the table does not claim to supply in every case an accurate description of the sounds. It merely attempts to furnish the best advice as to pronunciation that one can give under the circumstances.

Consonants.

ch; as in 'church'.

j; as in the French language, or as the 's' in the English 'fusion'.

hs; this combination is said to represent a sibilant preceded by an aspirate; but the student is advised to content himself with pronouncing it like sh. Note that hs is only found before the vowels i and ü.

ss; as s.

ts; as in 'hits'.

tʃ; as ts.

y; this letter has its English, consonant sound; but it is very faint in yen and yeh: the latter, for instance, often sounds like ieh.

Other consonants exactly as in English.

Vowels.

a; as in 'father;' but when coming between w and n, or w and ng, it is like the 'a' in 'want'.

ai; as in 'aisle', or in the French 'paille'.

ao; a combination of the above a with the 'ow' in 'how'.

e; as in 'yet' or in 'hen'. It is only found after i, ü and y. See under ie.

ei; as the 'ey' in 'grey'.

ê; almost the German 'oe', and near the vowel sound in 'turn'; êrh, something like 'err', but the r must not be rolled; ên and êng have the same vowel sound as our 'fun' and 'hung'.

i; as the vowel sound in 'flee'; but the i in in, though sometimes sounding like the 'ee' in 'seen', is generally nearer to the 'i' in our 'sin'; and the sound of ing is exactly as in our 'sing'.

ia; a combination of the sounds i and a, as given above; but the i is pronounced lightly, as in 'piano'.

iao; a similar combination of i and ao.

ie; a similar combination of i and e. It is only found in words ending in ieh or ien. For ieh take the 'ie' in 'siesta', (the h does not affect the sound). For ien take the 'ien' in 'Sienna'.

iu; similar combination of i and of u as given below.

ih; found in chih, jih, shih: this sound is quite different from i. Until the student can hear it pronounced by a Chinese, his best plan will be to take the first syllable of 'chivalry' for chih, and to keep the same vowel sound for jih and shih. The final h is not sounded: it is merely used to show that the vowel is not the ordinary i.

PRONUNCIATION.

o; nearly but not quite so broad as the 'aw' in 'law'.

ou; between the vowel sounds in our 'how' and 'hoe'. The student is advised simply to adopt the latter.

u; as the vowel sound in 'too'. In un and ung it is shortened. Thus sun is not exactly like 'soon', but its vowel sound resembles the 'oo' in 'foot'.

uai; uei; ui; uo; these are combinations of u with a, ai, ei, i, o, as given above; they come between wa and oo-a, wai and oo-ai, etc., etc., sometimes the one sound sometimes the other seeming most nearly correct. If one substitutes 'oo' for 'ew' in 'dewy', one has the sound of ui.

ü; like the French 'u' in 'du' or 'tu'.

üa; only found in üan: the ü keeps its ordinary sound, and the an is almost as flat as the English 'an'. Some authorities write üen.

üe; for this take the sounds given under ie, above, and substitute ü for i.

üo; a combination of ü and o, as above.

ŭ; this sound, which is only found after ss and ts, is very difficult to identify, and still more difficult to describe. For ssŭ, take the first syllable of 'surrender', as it is ordinarily pronounced, — of course without giving any weight to the 'r'. The ŭ in tsŭ is the same.

In Pekingese there are many words which begin with ch, followed by i or ü. But in Southern Mandarin (which in this is more in accord with the ancient language) these words begin, some of them with k, the others with ts. Thus, where a Peking man says chin, chiang, ch'üan, a southerner will say either kin or tsin, kiang or tsiang, k'üan or ts'üan, as the case may be. If one does hear chin in the south, it is for some word which is pronounced chên in the north.

Again, hs in the north, which is always followed by i or ü, represents either an h or an s in the south. Thus a Peking man says hsia and hsün; a southerner, hia or sia, hün or sün.

3. ASPIRATES.

It will be noticed that certain initial consonants are often followed by an inverted comma, e. g., p'ing. The inverted comma denotes an aspirate. That is to say, the speaker must emit a breath as he pronounces these consonants. To a Chinese p'ing and ping are perfectly different sounds; while, though he says ping and not bing, his ear apparently recognizes no distinction between unaspirated p and b. The Russians, who are good speakers of Chinese, always use b, d, instead of p, t, etc.

4. TONES.

The Tones are of the very highest importance in speaking Chinese. But it would be waste of time for the student to occupy himself with them, till he can learn the spoken language with a native teacher. Therefore no attempt is made here to explain them. Nevertheless, for the benefit of any reader who may have commenced the study of the spoken language, the tones of all words in these Exercises are marked according to Sir Thos. Wade's system, e. g., *chien*¹, *tung*⁴.

II. THE RADICALS.

The study of the Chinese written language should commence with the two hundred and fourteen radicals. The radicals are written words or characters, each of them having its own sound and its own meaning, just as any other Chinese character has. About one fourth of them are obsolete; but the remainder are in use at the present day or are found in existing books, and among them are many of the very commonest words in the language. There are two main reasons why it is important to become well acquainted with them. First, whereas most Chinese characters have been made by combining together two or more simpler ones, the radicals are, for the most part, primary, i. e. non-compounded characters, and to a large extent form the materials from which the other characters have been built up. Therefore, if a student is familiar with the radicals, he will find the labour of learning other words very greatly lightened. Secondly, a knowledge of them is required for the purpose of handling a dictionary. In a Chinese-English dictionary every character is indexed under some one or other of the radicals, and recourse must be had to the index, whenever one wishes to find a word of which one does not know the sound; while in a purely Chinese dictionary there is no means of tracing a word at all, except through the radicals.

The beginner ought to be told something about the history of the radicals. But this will be much more intelligible to him after he has gained some practical acquaintance with them. We will therefore leave it for the moment, and return to it in a subsequent chapter.

It is not easy to decide how far the beginner should confine himself to the study of the radicals, before proceeding to the Exercises. Some people find it irksome to work for a comparatively long time at nothing but unconnected words; but those who can conquer their distaste for this, and acquire a thorough acquaintance with the radicals, will certainly not regret it afterwards.

It is very important to know the number of strokes in each radical. This will not give much trouble, as the radicals are arranged in the list in accordance with the number of their strokes.

It is not, however, always quite a simple matter to count the strokes in a character. As a general rule, a line in any direction is one stroke. But there are exceptions. If one line ends just where the line next to be written will begin, the two are made together, without the pen being lifted from the paper, and therefore they count as only one stroke. Thus it becomes important to know something of the order in which the strokes are written. As to this, the Chinese say 'left before right, above before below'; and so a character will be commenced ordinarily from the top left hand corner. Note also that all perpendicular strokes are written downwards, and all horizontal strokes towards the right; though among the slanting strokes there are some, more or less downwards, towards the left, and some upwards towards the right. Now let us look at Radical 13. In writing this, first the down stroke on the left side is made, then the top and the right hand stroke, the last two being in one: total, two strokes. Radical 30 is formed in a similar way, with the addition, finally, of the lower horizontal: total, three strokes. Nos. 44, 72, 80, 102, 109 all have these same two strokes in one. In Radicals 17, 22, 46, 80, the left hand and the bottom lines are written together, so as to form only one stroke. No. 28 is made by a double stroke and then a dot, No. 52 by two double strokes and a dot. The upper part of No. 120 is formed in the same way. No. 57 has a double stroke at the top, then the horizontal line in the middle, then three strokes in one. These instructions should be sufficient to explain how the majority of the characters are written; but there are a few which would require more detailed information than can conveniently be given here.

THE LIST OF RADICALS.

1. The radicals marked with an * have modified forms, which are frequently used instead of the originals in the composition of other characters. These are shown at the foot of the page and should all be carefully noted.

2. The radicals marked with a † are now obsolete and are only met with as parts of other characters. It is therefore not necessary to remember their sounds.

3. When the student has reached the end of the radicals of four strokes, he should turn to page 22. He will find there a short exercise which will test his knowledge of what he has learnt. Following it are other exercises, on the later radicals.

NOTE. The 146th Radical should really be the obsolete character 冂, hsia or ya, 'to cover', which has been placed at the foot of the page as a modified form; and hsi, 'west', which is given in the list as the 146th Radical, should be among the modified forms. But most of the characters classified under this Radical are formed from 西 and not from 冂; and the Chinese commonly speak of it as 'The Radical West' (Hsi Tzŭ Pu).

III. ON CHINESE CHARACTERS.

If this chapter does not interest the beginner, or if it proves difficult for him to understand, because of his want of practical acquaintance with Chinese characters, he is advised to pass it by for the moment. He might return to it and give it another trial, if he likes, at any time after he has made some progress in the exercises which follow.

The earliest characters, as the old Chinese writers inform us, were of two classes, first, Hieroglyphs or Pictographs*, that is to say rough delineations of natural objects, such as a man, a mountain, the sun, a horse; secondly, attempts to represent other words, of which it was not possible to make an actual picture; e.g. two parallel lines were drawn to give the idea of 'two', a dot over a line meant 'above', a dot under a line 'below', and so on. Indicative characters these have been termed. Even those persons who hold the theory that the earliest characters, or some of them, were not indigenous but imported from abroad, will probably have no difficulty in accepting as accurate the above description of their origin. Though Chinese writing has been but very little altered during the last two thousand years, or thereabouts, that was not the case previously; for in earlier times it underwent very great modifications. In consequence of those changes, with the exception of two or three numerals, I think I may say that none of these pictographs and indicative characters, as now written, give at first sight any hint of what they were intended to represent. With the help, however, of ancient forms which have been preserved, one can trace the resemblance of many of them to their originals*.

* I borrow the word 'pictographs' from a most valuable paper on 'The Origin of Chinese Writing' by Mr. L. C. Hopkins, a very high authority on the subject. Mr. Hopkins's paper reached me after this chapter was written, but fortunately not before it was printed. Much of the chapter, however, is based on the translation from the Chinese called 'The Six Scripts', published by Mr. Hopkins many years ago.

Next to the above two classes of characters, which may conveniently be included under the one name of Primaries, one may mention a small number of characters which were said to have been obtained by turning others upside down, by reversing them, or by placing them on their side. These are not numerous or important, and we need not linger over them. Now we come to the great mass of the written words in the language, which were made by combining together two or more already existing characters so as to form one.

These combinations were framed on more than one system. First, I believe, in point of time came a class which may be called that of Combined Ideas. In this class two, or sometimes more than two characters were put together to represent one idea, to which each contributed a part, without any regard being paid to their sound. Thus 男, the written form of nan, man or male, was got by joining together 田 t'ien, field, and 力 li, strength, the idea here being manifestly that of the person who works in the field, the husbandman. Another such character is 災 tsai, a calamity, formed from 川 ch'uan, a stream (flood), and 火 huo, fire. Again, 伏 fu, to crouch, is 人 jên, man, and 犬 ch'üan, dog. So, 林 lin, a forest, was made by doubling 木 mu, a tree; and 坐 tsu, to sit, comes from 人 jên, man, written twice, and 土 t'u, earth, — men on the ground. In none of these examples, it will be noticed, is there any resemblance in sound between the compound character and either of its constituent parts.

Secondly there is the class of Phonetic Combinations. Here some one wishing to inscribe a word, which had not previously been written, or whose written form was unknown to him, took a character of the required sound, without any regard to its meaning, and combined with it another, of which the signification was as far as possible appropriate. Thus, for an article made of wood, the added character would probably be that for 'wood'; for something made of metal, probably that for 'metal'; for a mental condition or process, that for 'heart'; for a verb of progression, that for 'foot', or that for 'walk', and so on. For instance, when grapes were introduced into China, they were called p'u-t'ao (manifestly an attempt to pronounce their foreign name, very possibly βότρυς, or some modification of it). Some one, desiring to put p'u-t'ao into writing, took 匍 p'u, to crawl, and 匏 t'ao, a kiln, and adding to each 艹, the modified form of 'plants', wrote 葡萄, which two characters established themselves in the written language. This is an example taken from a comparatively late period; but it is one concerning which there can be no doubt, and which clearly illustrates the principle. In characters of this class it is customary to speak of the part connected with the meaning as the radical, and of the part which gives the sound as the phonetic.

There remains one more kind of combination, which may be called the Metaphorical Class. What is here meant may be shown more simply by examples than by an attempt to give a definition. The following is a well known instance: — There is a word 昏 hun, dusk. As weddings took place in the evening, it became common to call a wedding a hun (昏). After a time, when using hun with the meaning of 'wedding', the Chinese took to writing it with 女, woman, at the side, to show that it was used with its metaphorical, not with its original signification. Thus was formed a new character 婚 hun, a wedding. So when 昏 took another extension of meaning, and signified a darkness or dullness of mind, the modified form of 心, heart, was prefixed to it, and it was written 惛. By a similar metaphor there is 瞢 hun, dimness of vision, made by adding 目, the eye. Besides these the dictionary gives three other compounds, 殄, 湮, 闕, all formed to express metaphorical uses of the word 昏. Again, there is 毀 hui, to destroy. This word acquired the special meaning of destroying a person's reputation, blaming, slandering. Later, when bearing these meanings, it was written with 言, words, at the side, and became 譏. When the student reads the classics he will find 毀 still used with the meaning of blame or slander, without 言 at the side. Further, 毀 also took the signification of a destructive fire, a conflagration, and then 火, fire, was attached to it, and it was written 燬. So there is 扇 shan, a fan. From this there come 搧 shan, to fan, to flog, 煽 shan, to fan a flame, to excite, 誑 shan, to beguile, in each case the meaning, and not merely the sound, coming from shan, a fan. There are some words of this class for which it is optional at the present day to employ either the original or the later form. Thus there is 果 kuo, which at first signified 'fruit', then in addition 'really'. When meaning 'fruit', but not when meaning 'really', it is now, as often as not, written 菓, the character for 'plants' having been added. This case is peculiar, in that the more complex form is employed for the original and not for the secondary meaning of the word. In these metaphorical characters, as in the true phonetic characters, it is common to use the terms 'radical' and 'phonetic' for the added part and the part which gives the sound respectively.

Owing to our ignorance of the Chinese language in its early days, it is in many cases difficult to decide whether a character belongs to the Phonetic or to the Metaphorical Class; and very little help is to be got from the old Chinese dictionaries. The metaphorical characters, however, are certainly very numerous. As one turns over the leaves of a dictionary one sees manifest instances on almost every page that one glances at. It is to be expected that they should be numerous. For, before the introduction of writing, the vocabulary of the Chinese, as that of any other illiterate nation, was sure to have been extremely limited. When intellects became sharpened and ideas multiplied under the influence of letters, new words would be required. Where were these to come from? There was absolutely no foreign literature accessible, to enrich the language, as for instance Latin enriched English. The Chinese were superior to all the surrounding tribes in civilization and mental development, so that oral intercourse with their neighbours could bring them but little. The most natural way in which they could increase their vocabulary was by the metaphorical employment of existing words; and, as soon as the system of forming combined characters had taken root, it would have been strange if they had not largely employed such an easy method of distinguishing in writing between the original and the various secondary meanings of a word.

Chinese authorities have noted that in many cases a character was provided for a spoken word by what is called adoption, that is to say by simply borrowing without any addition or alteration the character for another word which had the required sound. This expedient, though applied to other words as well, was more especially employed for pronouns, conjunctions, interjections, and the like, which could not well be represented by anything in the nature of a picture, nor even by 'combined ideas'. Among the instances given of such characters are 也, 夫 (now), 不, 何, 所, 之, 其, 安 (how), 則, all which the student will meet with in the early exercises in this volume.

In these adopted characters perhaps is to be found the origin of the phonetic combinations. Much difficulty and confusion must have resulted from the employment of characters to represent ideas entirely unconnected with their recognized meaning; and so, I imagine, the happy thought suggested itself to somebody of attaching another character to the adopted one, thus not only showing that it was being used with a new meaning, but also giving a slight clue to what that meaning was. From that point it was only a very short step, one might almost say no step at all, to the systematic formation of phonetic combinations. This however is pure speculation and is quite incapable of proof.

We will now return to the radicals, about which it was promised in the preceding chapter that something more should be said.

In an alphabetic language the order of the letters gives a natural and satisfactory way of arranging words in a dictionary, so that they may be found without difficulty. But the Chinese, who were without this resource, had to invent some other method. The system which they adopted was based on the fact that most of the characters consisted of combinations of simpler ones. In each character, with the exception of the primaries, they selected as a key word one of its component parts; and all the characters which had the same key word were put together in one group with that key word as its heading. But how did they decide which of the component parts should be selected for the purpose? In the phonetic and metaphoric characters they fixed upon the part connected with the meaning but not with the sound, which is ordinarily termed the radical, as has already been mentioned. Thus, — 燬 and 煽 would be arranged under 火; 譏 and 誦 under 言; 葡 and 萄 and 菓 all under 艸. There were also the characters of the 'Combined Ideas' class to be dealt with. In such words one part had as much right as another to be considered the radical; and the selection of the key word apparently was made by chance, or in some cases because one part looked as if it ought to be the radical. It remains to be said what was done with the primaries. Most of these were among the characters which had been selected as key words, and so found themselves naturally at the heads of groups. A few however had not been thus employed; but, as they could not be resolved into simpler forms, they still were placed among the headings, though there were no groups under them.

The earliest Chinese work, so far as is known, which can properly be called a dictionary is the Shuo wên (說文), published in A. D. 121. In this the characters are distributed under five hundred and forty heads or radicals. Later lexicographers thought that it would be more convenient to have fewer groups. They therefore gradually reduced the number of the radicals, till at last there were only two hundred and fourteen. This had become the recognized number some three hundred years ago, a little while before the last great dictionary, that of K'ang Hsi, was compiled; and it seems likely to be permanent. How were the reductions made? First, there were many among the original radicals which were compound, not primary characters. Most of these were eliminated from the list, and they and their groups distributed under other headings. Thus 林 and 男, both formerly among the radicals, were placed, the one under 木, the other under 田. A few, however, were preserved, either because a great many characters were classified under them, or because they were the heads of particularly natural groups. Of the compound characters thus retained, 見 and 影 may be mentioned as very conspicuous instances. Secondly, even among the radicals recognized as primaries, a good many were struck out as not worth keeping, because they had no groups, or only very small ones, attached to them. By these means the list was brought down to its present size. Where, perhaps it will be asked, was a place found for these rejected primaries? For, as they had not been constructed from simpler forms, there was necessarily no heading under which they could rightly be put. This gave no difficulty to the later dictionary makers, who were concerned solely with practical convenience. Without any regard for theoretical accuracy, each such primary was assigned to some radical or other, which in a way did form part of it, though there was no real connexion between the two. Thus, 三 and 勿 are both undoubted primaries, and formerly stood among the heads of groups; but they are now found classified under the radicals 一 and 勹, from which they certainly were not formed.

To resume briefly what has been said above: — first, the radicals in the present list are mostly, but not quite all of them, primary characters; secondly, there are some primary characters not included among them; thirdly, the radicals are used as classifiers, or key words, under which other characters are arranged in the dictionary; fourthly, in an ordinary compound character the part of it selected to serve as its radical is the part which had been added to it to mark its meaning but was quite unconnected with its sound. In conclusion it may be noted that the common Chinese term for radical is pu shou (部首), head of a tribe or class.

ON CHINESE CHARACTERS.

IV. EXERCISES.

In translating these Exercises the student should make sure that he understands the exact construction of each sentence word by word. This ought not to prove a difficult matter; as the English version is very literal, and free use has been made of brackets, in order to render it more intelligible. It seemed better that the compiler should expose himself to the charge of uncouthness, rather than run the risk of his translations not being understood. Wherever the rendering is not sufficiently exact, explanation has been given in the foot-notes.

At the beginning of each Exercise there will be found a short list of Chinese characters, together with their sound and meaning. In this list are comprised all the words which are new to the learner in the accompanying Exercise. It is assumed that he is already acquainted with the radicals.

One cannot impress too strongly on the beginner the necessity of fixing in his memory every character which he meets with in his lessons. It is not enough for him to 'get up' the translation of passages. He should be able to recognize each character when detached from its context, and to give its sound and principal meaning. Knowledge of characters is not by any means knowledge of Chinese; though a student who is not familiar with them is like a workman without tools: he will never accomplish anything. One constantly hears persons unacquainted with the Chinese language remark that they suppose its principal difficulty lies in the multitude of the characters. This is quite a mistake. At starting a certain amount of effort and persistence is required, in order to get a few hundred characters fixed in one's mind so firmly that they will not escape from it again. But, once this has been effected, adding to one's stock becomes a comparatively simple task; and, the more one learns, the easier will it be to make further acquisitions. A man with very moderate powers of memory need have no apprehensions as to his ability, without excessive labour, to store in his mind as many characters as are needful for all ordinary work. But, long before he reaches this point, he will have discovered how many and how formidable are the other difficulties which the language presents to him who studies it.

EXERCISE I.

三 *san*¹, three.

四 *ssü*⁴, four.

五 *wu*³, five.

六 *liu*⁴, six.

七 *ch'i*¹, seven.

九 *chin*³, nine.

百 *pai*³, a hundred.

千 *ch'ien*¹, thousand.

萬 *wan*⁴, ten thousand.

爲 *wei*², to be, to do, to make;

*wei*⁴, because of, for.

不 *pu*¹, not.

之 *chih*¹, him, her, it, them; sign of the genitive case; to go to.

1. 17; 64; 589; 3,492.

2. 75,000; 369,800.

3. A million; seventy million.

2. Ch'i wan, seven ten-thousands, = seventy thousand. As this and the next example show, the Chinese count numbers above ten thousand not by multiples of a thousand, but by ten-thousands and multiples of ten-thousand.

4. Fifty [or] sixty; seven [or] eight thousand.
5. The fourth month, 19th day; the eleventh month, 23rd day.
6. Seven pecks [of] rice; four pounds [of] fish.
7. Four [or] five inches; eight inches [and] three [tenths].
8. Six thousand seven hundred li in length.
9. A man lives seventy [years].
10. Square; triangle; oblong.
11. Three sevens make twenty-one.
12. Blue, white, red, black, yellow, are the five colours.
13. To go but not to arrive; to go and not stop.
14. [When the] month [is] big, [there are] thirty days; when it is small, twenty-nine days.
15. [For] three months [he did] not see a human face.

6. The Chinese pound, or catty, equals $1\frac{1}{3}$ English pounds.

8. 長 *ch'ang*², long. The li is about one third of an English mile.

9. 生 is a word of many meanings: as an adjective, it means, — living, raw, wild, strange; in opposition to — dead, cooked, tame, familiar. As a verb it is, — to live, to grow, to produce.

10. Lit., four square; three horns; long square.

16. [When their] clothes [and] food [are] insufficient, workmen [will] not exert themselves.

17. Men do not use it.

18. Dogs [and] pigs eat it, men do not eat it.

19. The father said to his son, 'Do not be a mean man!'

20. [Of] the five elements, the first is called water; the second, fire; the third, wood; the fourth, metal; the fifth, earth.

16. Pu tsu, not enough; yung li, use strength.

19. Lit., the father spoke [to his] son, saying. Hsiao, small, is often used for a 'mean', or 'petty' man, in opposition to chün-tzü, a prince-like, or superior man.

20. It is customary to translate 五行 by 'the five elements.' What the ancient Chinese meant by the expression, it is hard to say; but it certainly was something different from our idea of elementary substances, of which all others are composed. A fanciful derivation for the name is given in Ex. 18. 4.

With regard to (1) the definite and the indefinite article, (2) conjunctions, (3) the copula, (4) pronouns, both personal and possessive, (5) signs of the plural, (6) auxiliaries or signs of tenses in verbs, — it will be well to remark that, though there are means of expressing these in Chinese, when the writer may think it desirable, still they are all very generally omitted, the reader being left to infer them from the context. Also, a verb may be in the passive voice, without any distinguishing sign. Thus in this Example we have 曰水, 'is called water'.

EXERCISE 2.

我 *wo*³, I.

爾 *êrh*³, thou.

有 *yu*³, to have, to be.

無 *wu*², not.

知 *chih*¹, to know.

在 *tsai*⁴, in, at; to be alive.

皆	chieh ¹ , all, both.	possessive, also demonstra-
此	ts'ü ³ , this.	tive.
母	mu ³ , mother.	能 nêng ² , can, able to.
其	ch'i ² , pronoun of the third person, both personal and	死 ssü ³ , to die.

父⁸ 有⁷ 皆 人 無 知 我 女 我¹
 母 我 知 立 衣、 面、 不 無 有

1. I have sons and not daughters: you have daughters and not sons.
2. You know it: I do not know it.
3. [When] you know men, you know their faces, you do not know their hearts.
4. Naked and hungry.
5. There is a man standing in the door-way.
6. You all know this is of great use (lit. greatly has use).
7. I, one man, am here.
8. The father and mother are both alive.

4. Lit., body has not clothes, mouth has not food.

6. Adverbs are placed before the verb or adjective that they qualify. 大, great, is usually an adjective; but here its position just before the verb shows that it is used as an adverb; and 用, generally a verb, is here a substantive, the object of the verb that it follows. The student must be prepared at every moment to find words which he knows as one part of speech employed as some other. It has even been said that "a Chinese character may in general be considered an idea without reference to any part of speech; and its being used as a substantive, an adjective or a verb depends upon circumstances". This perhaps overstates the case, but it undeniably contains a great deal of truth.

7. Lit., there is me, one man, in this [place].

首、手。鹿¹⁷爲¹⁴魚¹⁴有¹³人。皆有之。知其子之心。此⁹
 一在其足。其¹⁸母見有二人、一在其

 人不能自見其面。小人¹²知有己、不知
 父¹¹母之心、人
 力不大。父¹⁰不

9. This man does not know that his strength is not great.
10. A father does not know his son's heart.
11. A parent's heart, all have it.
12. The mean man knows [that there] is himself, and does not know [that there] are [other] men (i. e. is selfish).
13. A man cannot see his own (lit. himself see his) face.
14. Fish cannot fly, neither can they walk.
15. To die and become a ghost.
16. The birds saw him die and ate his flesh.
17. Deer have horns, dogs have teeth, birds have claws, men have hands.
18. His mother saw that there were two men, one at his head, the other at his feet.

9. 其 here, and again in the next Example, is the possessive 'his'.

10. 子之心, son's heart: this is the possessive use of chih; like the English 's, it follows the word to which it is attached.

11. Here 之 is attached to the two preceding words, father-and-mother's.

EXERCISE 3.

可 k'o ³ , may, can.	重 chung ⁴ , heavy, important.
多 to ¹ , many, much.	過 kuo ⁴ , to pass, to transgress; a sign of the past tense.
語 yü ³ , words; yü ⁴ , to tell.
於 yü ² , in, at, with.	民 min ² , the people.
古 ku ³ , ancient.	王 wang ² , king, prince.
何 ho ² , what? how? why?	天 t'ien ¹ , the sky, heaven.

- [One] may see [that] he has not enough to eat.
- There is much gold here.
- [He did] not eat much: [when] eating [he did] not talk.
- One may know that man's strength does not attain to this.
- The men of old all knew that this might not be done.
- You are whose (lit. what man's) son?
- I do not know in what month [and on] what day his father died.
- Gold is heavier than feathers.

2. Tsai tz'ü here, to yu, there muchly is, — to an adverb qualifying the verb.
Huang chin, yellow metal, gold.

4. 至於, arrive at, reach to.

5. 古之, of antiquity — ku must here be regarded as a substantive. Note that 爲, to do, is in the passive voice.

7. 其, his.

8. Lit., gold is heavy [compared] with feathers. We have here one method of forming the comparative degree in Chinese.

9. There is no saying more important than this.
10. Weighing six thousand and more pounds.
11. There was a man passed by and did not enter.
12. The people raised him up to be king.
13. A man does not know his own faults: an ox does not know that its strength is great.
14. The king addressed his minister, saying, 'What man has not faults?'
15. The sky has not two suns, nor the people two kings.
16. There is an old proverb [which] says that the scholars are the chief of the four [classes of] people.
17. The emperor is the parent of the people.
18. The bows and arrows of old times, every one knows that they are of no use.

9. Lit., there is no saying heavy and great [compared] with this.

11. Tsou-kuo, to go past.

12. 立 is here a transitive verb.

13. 己, of himself, his own.

16. Shou, the head, Rad. 185.

17. T'ien tzü, the Emperor, lit. Son of Heaven. A Chinese teacher would tell one to supply 之 between t'ien and tzü; a foreign grammarian would say that t'ien is 'genitive by position'. On every page we shall meet with instances of genitives without 之.

18. Ch'i wen yung, lit. they have not use.

19. West of these mountains is the Red Water; (2) west of the Red Water are the White Jade Mountains; (3) west of the White Jade Mountains are the Mountains of the Western Queen-Mother.

19. Tz'ü shan hsi; see Note to Example 17 above. (3) Hsi wang mu; 'Western King's Mother' is the natural rendering for these words; but here they should probably be translated 'Western Queen-Mother'.

EXERCISE 4.

學 hsüeh ² , to learn.	福 fu ² , happiness, good fortune.
義 i ⁴ , righteousness, duty.	命 ming ⁴ , command, fate, life.
幼 yu ⁴ , young.	道 tao ⁴ , a path; the right way,
年 nien ² , year.	doctrine, religion; to say.
貴 kuei ⁴ , honourable, valuable.	事 shih ¹ , business, trouble; to
君 chün ¹ , sovereign, ruler.	serve.
也 yeh ³ , a terminal particle;	使 shih ³ , to use, to employ.
also.

- [If] men do not learn, they will not know righteousness.
- [If] you learn not when young, what will you do when old?
- All men know that he is old and useless.
- When a boy is ten years old (lit. when a man lives ten years), he is called a young student.

1. The Chinese have several words for 'if'; but instead of using them they often, as here, leave the reader to infer from the context that the sentence is conditional.

2. Lit., young not learn, old what do.

3. 人 人; this is a common way of saying 'men' or 'all men': other substantives are similarly duplicated; nien lao, old [in] years.

5. The people are of importance, and not the sovereign.
6. To be the emperor's father is the extreme of honour.
7. This is immense good fortune.
8. Death and life are ordained by fate (lit. have fate); fortune and honour rest with (lit. are in) heaven.
9. Heaven does not speak and yet it can proclaim its commands.
10. When it is dark (lit. sky is black) no one travels.
11. Old and young all know that human life is extremely important.
12. In old times there was a king, who went into the mountains to learn religion.
13. There is the business of great men, and the business of small men.
14. The prince employs the minister; the minister serves the prince.

6. 至, to reach to, to reach to the end; then, as an adv., extremely, or, as a subst., extreme point; 也 is employed to mark the end of a sentence, or to make a pause in one.

7. 天大, heaven-big, as big as heaven: these two words form a compound adjective, but such adjectives, when attached to a following noun, require the addition of a 之 between them and it.

9. Note that 而 here means 'and yet', not simply 'and'.

11. 至, adv., extremely.

12. 一王; 一 here is merely the indefinite article.

15. [If they were] not his people, he would not employ them; [if it were] not his prince, he would not serve him.
 16. The son addressed his father, saying, 'I have served you for many years'.
 17. This is not the right course for a superior man.
 18. The superior man does not perform one unrighteous act.
 19. As to earth, as to stone, as to metal; they none of them have either life or the power of movement.

15. 其 may be taken as 'his', or as a strong demonstrative — the people, the right people to employ.

17. Chün-tzū, a princely man, a man of noble nature, a superior man. He is the opposite to the small or mean man: cf. Ex. 1. 19.

18. 不義之, adj., unrighteous, attached to the following noun: cf. No. 7. above.

19. 也 here marks a pause after each preceding word: its force is brought out fairly enough in the translation. Chieh pu nêng, etc., lit. all cannot live and grow, also cannot walk and go; 長, meaning 'to grow', is read *chang*³.

EXERCISE 5.

出 *ch'u*¹, to go out, send out. 內 *nei*⁴, inside.
 中 *chung*¹, the middle, within. 外 *wai*⁴, outside.
 安 *an*¹, peace, quiet. 信 *hsin*¹, to believe, sincere; a letter, news.
 欺 *ch'i*¹, to deceive, cheat.
 則 *tsê*², then; a pattern, rule. 仁 *jên*², benevolent.

Ex. 5.

EXERCISES.

1. [May you] meet with happiness on going out of doors.
2. When the people saw this affair, they were all uneasy in their minds.
3. If you do not cheat people, your mind will be at ease.
4. Inwardly [one should] not deceive oneself; outwardly [one should] not deceive [other] men.
5. The high officials at the capital and in the provinces issue proclamations to quiet the people.
6. He who believes in other men and distrusts himself, is not a superior man.
7. If prince and ministers be not sincere [towards each other], the people will not be at rest.

2. 中, like some other prepositions, follows instead of preceding its noun.

3. 則; this is a common use of tsé. Where in English we put 'if' or 'when' before the first clause, the Chinese often put tsé before the second, instead. We say, 'if you do not cheat, you will be at ease': they say 'you do not cheat, then you are at ease'. Frequently, however, as we saw in the last Exercise, the 'if' is left to be inferred entirely from the context.

5. Chung wai, central and external: these two words when found together generally mean 'Chinese and foreign', but in this particular sentence their meaning is that given in the translation: 示 is here a substantive, 'proclamation': 安 is a transitive verb, 'to quiet'.

6. 自, when the object of a verb, is always placed before it; 也 marks the end of the sentence.

皆見之。之過也。如日月之食。人曰、非我年也。君¹⁴子門。民¹³無食而死、則王石飛土之風、人皆不出身、非止如子。有¹²此走王愛民如子。愛¹¹之如學道則愛人。天¹⁰仁之義外也。非內也。非外也。告⁸子曰、仁內也。非外也。

8. The philosopher Kao said, 'Benevolence is internal, it is not external, duty is external, it is not internal'.
9. The superior man learns right principles, and then he loves men.
10. The king, whose benevolence is vast as heaven, loves the people as his children.
11. He loves him as himself, not merely as a son.
12. [While there] is this wind which rolls stones and makes the dust fly, no one goes out of doors.
13. The people have nothing to eat and die; then the king says, 'It is not I, it is the year [that is the cause]'.
14. The faults of a superior man, they are like the eclipses of the sun and moon: every one sees them.

8. 子 is often found in the classics appended to a proper name as an honorific term, and is translated 'philosopher', 'excellency', etc., as may seem most suitable in each case. The repeated 也 breaks up the sentence into separate sections.

10. Tien-jên-chih, heavenly-benevolent, an adj. attached to 'king'.

11. Shên, the body, is often used for 'self'. Chih (Rad. 77), only, merely.

12. Note the causative force of the two verbs; note also that they and their objects are turned by the chih into participial phrases attached to 'wind', — this making-stones-to-go making-dust-to-fly wind.

14. 也 makes a pause and so gives emphasis. 食, an eclipse, from the old fable that the sun or moon at such times is being eaten by a dragon.

1. The common people ask and cannot obtain.
 2. To pray for benevolence and to obtain benevolence.
 3. This is called getting one thing and losing the [other] two.
 4. Seeking from others is not [so good] as seeking from oneself; using one's mouth (i. e. asking) is not [so good] as going oneself.
 5. To look upon other men's gains as [though they were] one's own gains; to look upon other men's losses as [though they were] one's own losses.
3. Ch'i i, the one; ch'i êrh, the two.
 5. 得 and 失 are substantives, — gains and losses.

6. The king spoke to him and said, 'This is the plain law of heaven'.
7. There was one man addressed him, saying, 'You well know this principle'.
8. Whether sitting or standing, not at ease.
9. Some say he is a good man, some say he is not a good man.
10. I tell you plainly that a good man may not do this.
11. To be a ghost for a thousand days is not [so good] as being a man for one.
12. The king's son went out and saw there was a man sitting and making horn bows; he was using (i. e. moving) his hands as though they flew.
13. Unintentional misconduct is called an error, wilful offence against the right is called wickedness.
14. You are all unaware that there are men behind.

6. 天理; these are not easy words to translate, — a principle established by heaven (or by God), an eternal principle.

12. I jên, one man, = a man.

13. 無心, not having the mind, unintentional; 失理, a failure in what is right, misconduct; 謂之, one calls it, = it is called; 背, to turn the back on, offend against; 非 a substantive, — wickedness.

14. Pei-mien, back face, behind, — here an adverb.

Ex. 7.

EXERCISE 7.

分 *fên*¹, to divide; *fên*⁴, a share, 今 *chin*¹, now, present time.
 one's lot, duty. 惡 *o*⁴ or *ê*⁴, bad; *wu*⁴ to hate.
 好 *hao*³, good; *hao*⁴, to love. 地 *ti*⁴, the earth, ground, place.
 上 *shang*⁴, above, on; up to, to. 欲 *yü*⁴, to desire.
 下 *hsia*⁴, below, under. 與 *yü*³, with, and.
 聖 *shêng*⁴, holy, saint, sage. 畏 *wei*⁴, to fear.

1. Not distinguishing good from bad.
2. One cannot be in two places at once (lit. cannot divide the body).
3. The responsibility lies with me (lit. is on my body).
4. When those above (i. e. the rulers) love benevolence, those below love duty.
5. The people of the empire are four hundred millions.
6. There is a road up to heaven, but none go [along it].
7. Sages and superior men are [to be found] both in the past and at the present day.
8. The sage has a heart which loves goodness and hates sin.

3. In this sentence one may regard 在 as a verb, 'is', and 上 as a preposition; but it is very common to find combined prepositions, one coming before, one after the substantive.

4. The force of 而 in this sentence is like that of 則 in Ex. 5. 3.

5. T'ien hsia, a substantive, — that which is below the sky. It means sometimes the world, sometimes the empire, which to a Chinese formerly seemed the same thing.

6. 上, when meaning 'to' or 'up to', precedes its noun, when meaning 'above' follows it.

8. 惡惡, wu o, hates wickedness.

9. The words of a bad man of course cannot be believed.
10. The territory of the empire is three thousand and more li square.
11. I wish to get a tract of a hundred li and rule over it.
12. These fields and lands of mine, I wish to divide into two parts.
13. Good words are not [said] behind men's backs; behind men's backs there are no good words.
14. The paths are two, that of benevolence and its opposite.
15. The Master wished to speak with him, but did not succeed in speaking with him.
16. Some men say that the Western Queen-Mother is the daughter of Heaven and Earth.
17. The superior man has three fears: (2) he fears the commands of heaven, he fears the great men, and he fears the words of the sages. (3) The mean man does not know the commands of heaven and does not fear.

9. 自, self, often means 'naturally' or 'of course'.

11. 君, used as a verb — to rule over.

12. 我, adj., my.

13. 背, here a prep.; pei jên, behind men.

14. Jên the benevolent, yü and, pu jên the not benevolent.

15. In Ex. 5. 8 we saw 子 appended to a name as an honorific term. Here it stands alone, but it has a similar meaning. It is constantly applied to Confucius by his disciples, and is then usually translated 'the Master'. Yü chih yen, with him to speak; êrh pu tê, but did not obtain, was not able to.

16. Western King's Mother, or Western Queen-Mother; cf. Ex. 3. 19.

Ex. 8.

EXERCISE 8.

1. Those who know do not speak, those who speak do not know.
2. The Master said, 'Those who know it are not equal to those who love it'.
3. I have not seen any one who can see his faults.
4. These are not the words of an uncultivated man.

1. 知者, the knowing persons, those who know; 言者, the speaking persons, those who speak.

者, chê, like the possessive 之, may be attached to one or to several words, and always follows the word or words to which it is attached. It has been well described as the equivalent either of ... 之人 or of ... 之事; thus 學者 may stand for 學之人, the learning man, he who learns, the learner; or it may stand for 學之事, the business or process of learning. Again, it is said to give a participial force to the preceding verb; and, as the examples above show, it often comes very near to the English termination -ing. Chê is commonly styled a relative pronoun; and, whether this description of it be scientifically accurate or not, in many cases it can best be translated by 'he who', 'that which', etc..

2. 知之者, the know-it men, chê being attached to two words; 不如, not as, = not as good as; hao⁴-chih-chê, the love-it men.

3. Wei chien, I have not seen: wei almost invariably conveys the idea of past time. In this sentence the chê is attached to four words, — the can-see-his-faults man.

5. Only the benevolent can love men, can hate men.
6. I have not seen any one who loves virtue as he loves beauty.
7. I am not possessed of intuitive knowledge.
8. The good man wishes to make correct his heart.
9. There has never been any one who is not upright himself and yet can make other men upright.
10. The Master said, 'Those who have virtue are sure to be able to speak (lit. to have words), those who can speak are not sure to have virtue; (2) the benevolent are sure to have courage, the courageous are not sure to have benevolence'.
11. Those who have boldness, not only the people fear them, the prince also fears them.
12. The farmers wish to till [the soil] in the king's wastes (or fields).
13. Agriculture is the main support (lit. the root) of life.

5. So far we have always found chê following a verb or a phrase containing a verb. Here it is attached to an adjective. Jên-chê, those who are benevolent, benevolent men.

6. Sê, colour, is used for 'beauty'. The chê goes with the five preceding words. The yeh merely marks the termination of the sentence.

7. Lit., I am not a born-and-know-it man: chih, it, is used indefinitely.

9. The chê is attached to the seven preceding words.

13. In this sentence chê = 之事: kêng-chê, that which is tilling, the business of tilling, agriculture. Shêng-ming, life.

14. The learning of old times was for oneself; the learning of to-day is on account of other men.
15. To determine the [relative] height of the mountains and size of the rivers.
16. The king said, 'Men's minds are unsettled'.
17. The heart is the source of life.
18. This matter comes within my proper duty.
19. The king is [like] a boat, the people [like] the water.
20. The great man is he who loses not his child-like heart.

14. Chê again = 之事: hsüeh-chê, studying, study; 爲, *wei*⁴, for, on account of.

15. Lit., to determine of the hills those which are high, i.e. are highest; yü, and.

17. Hsin-chê, 'that which is the heart', simply equal to 'the heart'. Chê here is joined to a substantive. It belongs to a special class, of which Dr. Hirth says, "in explanations and definitions chê is appended to the term to be defined, whereas "the characters forming the explanation are followed by 也, yeh." One may add that the use of the chê and the yeh in these cases is to mark distinctly the subject and the predicate of the sentence.

18. 在....之內, inside of; 我 my, 本 own, or proper, 分, *fên*⁴, lot or duty.

19. Chê, as in No. 17 above.

20. Ta-jên-chê, the great man; chê, as in Nos. 17 and 19 above, merely marking the subject and corresponding with the yeh at the end of the predicate. The second chê is joined to the seven preceding words and is the ordinary 'he who'. 赤 (Rad. 155) ch'ih, flesh-coloured; ch'ih tzu, a naked baby, a small child. One Chinese commentator has explained the last part of this sentence in a very different way. He makes it to be — he who does not lose the hearts of his children, i.e. of his people.

EXERCISE 9.

1. There were some who believed, and some who did not believe what he said.
2. He is omnipotent and omniscient.
3. This is something which you do not attain to.
4. Even the sage has things which he cannot do.
5. Cows and horses eat the green grass.
6. From ancient times till now, there has not been any one able to practise it.

1. 所, so, what, 其, ch'i, he, 言, yen, said, yu there were, hsin-chê those who believed. So, says Professor Julien, is a relative pronoun, which is always placed after the subject and before the verb which governs it: thus in the sentence before us, we have first the subject (ch'i he), next the object (so that which), lastly the verb (yen said). This rule may be fully accepted for the classics; but in more modern Chinese one sometimes finds passages where so is the subject instead of the object of the verb that follows it.

2. Lit., he has not that which he cannot [do], he has not that which he knows not.
3. Lit., this is not that which you, chi, reach to.
4. 亦, Lit. also, i. e. as well as other men.

7. Honour is what men desire.
8. If you, Sir, wish [for what is] good, the people will be good.
 The virtue of the superior man is [like] the wind, that of the common people is [like] the grass.
9. That which he can do, he certainly will do.
10. This man's coming and going do not depend on me.
11. He came before I went.
12. In front there are hills, behind there is water.
13. To make a bow with wood.

7. This use of 之 is very common, but requires explanation. The two words 所欲, 'what he desires' are regarded by the writer of the sentence as a substantive, = 'the thing desired', 'the desired object'. Thus chih is the ordinary sign of the genitive, and the sentence might be rendered 'honour is man's desired object'. In practise it will be found best to translate such sentences as though there were no chih, — 'honour is what men desire'.

8. 子, as we have already seen (Ex. 7. 15), is a term of respect. In the classics it is constantly used when politely addressing any one. 'The gentleman wishes', = 'you wish, Sir'. For the use of 而 here, cf. Ex. 7. 4. The 矣 is emphatic. T'ê here is not 'positive virtue', but something like 'moral nature'.

9. 所者; when these two words come into the same clause, take them together as a single relative, 'that which', etc.: cf. Julien, Syntaxe, Vol. I, 101.

10. Lit., is not [a matter] of my strength.

11. Lit., his coming was before, my going was afterwards.

13. The primary meaning of 以 is 'to use'. One might translate this sentence by 'to use wood and make a bow'.

14. The ancient kings won the empire by benevolence; they lost it by the want of benevolence.
 15. Do this, in order to preserve a benevolent mind.
 16. The superior man stores his mind with benevolence.
 17. Those whom one calls great ministers, serve their prince according to righteousness; when they cannot [do so], they retire.
 18. How is there this principle? (i. e. this is nonsense).

14. 之, possessive; lit., the ancient kings' gaining the empire, it was by, etc.

15. 以, 'by', 'whereby', and so 'in order to'.

16. Chün-tzū the superior man, i jên with benevolence, ts'un hsin stores his mind. Professor Julien lays it down that in this sentence 仁 is the direct object of the verb, 以 being merely the 'sign of the accusative case', and that before 心 the mind, one must supply the preposition 'in'; thus the translation would be 'stores benevolence in his mind'. In spite of the high authority of Professor Julien and the great learning with which he supports his view, the student is advised not to believe that 以 (which means 'by' or 'with') is ever used to mark an accusative. What seems really to be the case may be shown by certain expressions in our own language. For instance, in English one may say 'I presented him with a book', meaning 'I presented a book to him', or 'I told him of it', meaning 'I told it to him', but 'with a book' or 'of it' is not therefore to be regarded as grammatically (though it may be logically) the object of the verb. So it is in Chinese. When the verb signifies 'to present', and the thing presented is preceded by 以, the literal meaning is 'presents with something', and not 'presents something to'. Of course the poverty of our language may sometimes make it convenient, or even necessary, to translate the word coming after 以 as though it were directly governed by the verb; but that is a matter of idiom not of grammar.

17. So ... ché; see Note to Example 9 above. 以, 'with', by a simple transition often means 'according to'; 止 chih, to stop.

1. Who can go out except (lit. not) by the door?
2. Whom shall I deceive; shall I deceive heaven?
3. Is there any one who can store benevolence in his mind?
4. I will ask him how one may know the great laws of the world.
5. I venture to ask what is the extent of his learning.
6. There was a man asked, saying, 'By what [means], Sir, do you recognize the approach of old age'.
7. I also do not dare to follow your words, Sir,
8. I follow behind the great officers, [and therefore] I did not dare not to tell [of such a matter].

3. The 者 is connected with all the six preceding words; 將 etc., lit. take benevolence and store it in the heart, = store benevolence in the heart. Sometimes a writer, when framing his sentence, wishes the object to come before the verb. In such a case he makes use of chiang, to take; e. g. instead of 'store virtue', he says 'take virtue and store [it]'. Thus the substantive following chiang is grammatically the object of chiang, though logically the object of the main verb, which it precedes. This arrangement is most commonly seen when the object consists of several words, or when the verb is followed by an indirect object.

4. Chiang, here a sign of the future, — will. Yu ho here is simply 'how?'

5. Hsüeh-wên, learning. Yu ho, lit. as to [it] what? How about it?

6. Fu-tzū, the master, my, our, your master, — very frequently, but not solely, applied to Confucius. The sage's name was 孔, K'ung; and the word Confucius is simply K'ung-fu-tzū latinized. Fu-tzū the master, ho yu by what [means], chih knows (sentence put in third person for politeness), lao-chih of old age, chiang chih the approach (lit. about to arrive).

14. The Master said, 'If one does not know [Heaven's] commands, one is unable to be a superior man; (2) if one does not know the rules of propriety, one is unable to stand; (3) if one does not know words, one is unable to know men'.
15. The king addressed them and said, (2) 'What those men want is my territory. (3) I have heard it [said], (4) that the superior man does not injure people with that wherewith he nourishes them. (5) I will go away from it (from my territory)'. (6) The people of the country said, 'He is a benevolent man; he must not be lost'.

13 and 14. 無以, one has not whereby to = one has no means of.

15. (2) For this use of 之 see Note to Ex. 9. 7, where it is explained at some length; 所欲者 (cf. Ex. 9. 9), so chē that which, yǔ they want. (4) Just as 所 means 'that which', so 所以 means 'that with (or, by) which'; and like 所 it is placed between the subject and the verb. Also, if a 者 follows, it should be taken with the so i, and the three words should be translated together as 'that with which'. Thus, 君子 the superior man, 不害人 does not injure men, 以 with, 所以者 that with which, 其 he, 養人 nourishes men. (5) 將, sign of the future. The meaning of the two sections is, of course, that the king will go away rather than cause harm to his people by fighting to retain possession of his land, which is their source of nourishment.

10. Who is willing to leave his home and dwell far off in a strange land!
11. Some one said, 'On a former day I wished to see [you], but I could not succeed [in doing so]'.
12. The ancients exchanged children and taught them (used to teach each others' children).
13. The men of old did not use gold or silver: they bartered what they had for what they had not.
14. Western nations make money of gold and silver: ten [pieces of] silver money stand for one of gold money.
15. The empire, the state, the family: (2) the root of the empire is in the state, the root of the state is in the family, and the root of the family is in the person.
16. The road is straight as an arrow.
17. On the mountains there are straight trees, in the world there are not straight-forward men.

13. 以 with, ch'i so yu what they had, 易 they exchanged for, ch'i so wu, what they had not. Here is a case where our idiom requires us to translate the words following i, 'with', as though they were the object of the verb. See Note to Ex. 9. 16.

14. Lit., 'with gold and silver make money', not, 'make gold, etc., into money'; 當 tang⁴, stand for.

18. Either they did not see it, or they saw it and did not believe it.

19. The superior man must cultivate his character; (2) if he desire to cultivate his character, he must serve his parents; (3) if he desire to serve his parents, he must acquire knowledge of men; (4) if he desire to know men, he must acquire knowledge of heaven. (5) If he knows by what means to cultivate his character, he will know by what means to govern men; (6) if he knows by what means to govern men, he will know by what means to govern the empire, its states and its families.

19. Lit., pu k'o-i may not, pu hsiu not put in order, shên his person. (2) Lit., if he thinks to put in order his person, he may not not serve his parents. (5) Notice 所以, 'that by which', = 'by what means'; and see Note to Ex. 14. 15 (4).

EXERCISE 16.

誠 ch'êng ² , sincere; truly.	疑 i ² , doubt, suspicion.
平 p'ing ² , level, common; peace.	兩 liang ³ , two; a Chinese ounce.

1. The present day is truly a time of peace and quiet and no trouble.
2. If every man would love his parents and respect his elders, then the empire would be at peace.
3. What state does not consider it important to win the people's hearts?
4. To cultivate one's character, to regulate the family, to govern the state, to give tranquillity to the empire.
5. Though this plan was suitable for ancient times, there is no certainty that it would be suitable for the present.
6. The Three-character Poem and the Thousand-character Composition are what little children study.
7. Such important words as these, everybody ought to think over and reflect upon.

1. Chin-chê, the present time; cf. ku-chê, anciently.

2. Jên jên, all men, see Note to Ex. 4. 3; 親, to treat as parents, 長, *chang*³, to treat as elders; cf. Ex. 10. 12.

3. I of, tê min hsin winning the people's hearts, wei yao make an important matter.

4. 齊, even, regular, to regulate.

6. These are two Chinese school-books: the first is in lines of three words each; the second consists of exactly one thousand words, all different.

7. Fu ts'ü, like this, thus; ju-ts'ü-chih, 'such as this', an adj. attached to the subst. yen.

8. What the two men said did not agree, and the hearers all greatly doubted.
9. Six taels, two mace, seven candareens.
10. If you suspect a man, do not employ him; if you employ a man, do not suspect him.
11. There are some things which are agreeable (lit. are according to one's idea), some which are not agreeable.
12. Do not speak of men's faults, do not brood over former resentments.
13. From this you may know that the good have their recompense, and the wicked have their requital.
14. Some one said, 'What do you think of repaying injury with kindness?' (2) The Master said, 'With what [then] will you repay kindness? (3) Repay injury with justice, and kindness with kindness'.

9. The Chinese ounce or tael, like all Chinese weights and measures, varies in different places and trades, but it is $\frac{1}{16}$ of a Chinese pound or catty, and is about $1\frac{1}{2}$ oz. av.; the ch'ien, called by foreigners a mace, is $\frac{1}{16}$ of a tael; and the fên or candareen is $\frac{1}{16}$ of a mace.

13. 以 by, 是 this.

14. 如何, as to [that], what? How about that? (2) 何以, by what?

15. Those of old who wished to make-illustrious illustrious virtue throughout the empire, first ordered well their states. (2) Wishing to order well their states, they first regulated their families. (3) Wishing to regulate their families, they first cultivated their own characters. (4) Wishing to cultivate their characters, they first rectified their hearts. (5) Wishing to rectify their hearts, they first made their ideas sincere. (6) Their ideas being sincere, afterwards their hearts were rectified. (7) When their hearts were rectified, their characters were cultivated. (8) When their characters were cultivated, their families were regulated. (9) When their families were regulated, their states were well ordered. (10) When their states were well ordered, the empire was at peace.

15. The philosophy of this passage may not be easy to understand, but the grammatical construction and literal translation present no difficulty. In the opening sentence the 者, 'those who', is attached to all the preceding words; the second 明 'illustrious' (or something such) is an adj. qualifying 德; and the first 明 is a verb, the meaning of which corresponds with that of the adjective — to make illustrious. (2) 欲 ... 者 wishing, lit. those who wished: and so also in each of the next three sections. (5) 誠 make sincere, 其 their, 意 ideas.

EXERCISE 17.

兄 hsiung ¹ , elder brother.	已 i ³ , to end, stop; already.
弟 ti ⁴ , younger brother.	等 têng ³ , a grade, class; sign of the plural; to wait.
少 shao ³ , few; shao ⁴ , young.	故 ku ⁴ , cause, therefore; old; die.
他 t'a ¹ , other.	窮 ch'ung ² , poor, exhausted.
順 shun ⁴ , follow, accord with.	病 ping ⁴ , disease, fault.
樂 li ⁴ , pleasure, joy; yo ⁴ , music.	悌 ti ⁴ , the duty of a younger to an elder brother,
敬 ching ⁴ , to respect, revere.
乃 nai ³ , but, indeed, therefore.

1. All within the four seas are brothers.
2. At the moment men are few and affairs are many.
3. Even the young folk know that, if one be not correct one-self, one cannot correct others.
4. If names be not correct, language will not accord [with the truth]; (2) if language do not accord, things will not be accomplished; (3) if things be not accomplished, ceremonies and music will not flourish.
5. He who respects not his parents and respects others is called undutiful.

1. Hsiung-ti, brothers, also used colloquially as 'younger brother'.
 2. Mu ch'ien, that which is before the eyes, = at the present moment.
 3. Shao¹ nien, young; tzü ti = young folk; i chih, lit. also know, (they as well as their elders).

6. I, however, am not willing to forget it.
7. Everybody already knew that he was a man of ordinary class.
8. This, indeed, you ought all to learn and practise.
9. On the ninth and other days of the Sixth Month.
10. [Success in] fighting does not lie in strength, but merely in getting the [proper] plan.
11. This thing may not [be done], — for what reason?
12. To make virtue one's pleasure, — what pleasure is like this?
13. The poor man looks upon death as going home.

8. Erh-têng, ye; têng here is simply a mark of the plural. Hsiieh hsi, to learn and practise, to study.

9. Ch'u chin, the ninth day; ch'u is always placed before the numbers of the days of the month up to the tenth inclusive; 等日; têng, as in the last Example, is a mark of the plural, but with this difference, namely that here it means 'and others', — 'the ninth and other days'. In neither Example can there be any difficulty in deciding as to which of these two classes the têng belongs. In the first there is no reason whatever for inserting 'and others'; in the second the sentence would be nonsense without it. But the student will meet with passages where he must feel doubt as to which meaning to take. The best rule for him will be that, wherever the word or words qualified by têng either are necessarily plural, e.g. the names of two persons or things, or are capable of taking a plural, e.g. ping, a soldier, he should assume that the case is one of simple plural; unless, as occasionally happens, something in the context shows him that 'and others' is the more reasonable interpretation. cf. Dr. Hirth's Notes on the Chinese Documentary style.

10. 鬥, tou to fight, Rad. 191; 而已 and [then it is] ended = 'that is all', or 'and nothing more'.

11. 以 by, 何故 what reason?

12. Lit., with virtue make pleasure.

14. Because he was not in accord with his parents, he [felt] like a poor man [who] has no place to go to.

15. Disease enters by the mouth.

16. To teach the people affection and love, there is nothing better than filial piety: (2) to teach the people propriety and docility, there is nothing better than brotherly love: (3) to give peace to the ruler and govern the people, there is nothing better than propriety. (4) Propriety is respect and nothing more. (5) Therefore, if you are respectful to his father, a son will rejoice: (6) if you are respectful to his elder brother, a younger brother will rejoice: (7) if you are respectful to his sovereign, a minister (or, a subject) will rejoice.

17. Young children all know how to love their parents, (2) and

14. W'ei, because. Note that so is here the indirect object of the verb, — so kwei, that to which he might return.

16. Mo [there is] not, shan yü [anything more] good than, hsiao filialness. (2) 弟 is here read ti, and means the same as 悌. (4) 者, as in Ex. 8. 17, though without a corresponding 也; êrh i, as in No. 10, above; 矣, emphatic.

17. (2) 及, chi when, 其 they, 長, *chang*³ have grown. (3) I by, shih kr this reason; 孝 and 悌 here are verbs, — to be filial to, to be fraternal to;

when they have grown, they all know how to respect their elder brothers. (3) For this reason one knows that filial love for one's parents and fraternal love for one's elders are something in one's natural disposition; (4) it is not that there are some who know them, some who do not, some who are capable of them, some who are not.

天 heaven-sent, natural — t'ien hsing chung, in one's natural disposition. (4)
 The 者 must be taken with each of the four clauses: 不是 it is not [that] 有知者 there are those who know [them], 有不知者 there are those who do not, etc., etc..

7. Man lives for one generation; grass grows for one spring.
8. He has a very serious illness: I fear he cannot live.
9. The life and death of every creature is always determined by heaven.
10. [During] a man's life one only thinks of his errors; (2) but when he is dead (lit. on coming to his death), one only thinks of his virtues.

3. Wo-têng, we.

5. Wan wu, lit. a myriad times do not, do not on any account. Ch'ing and chung are verbs, 'think lightly of' and 'think highly of.'

5. [If people] unite, they will not be ill-treated by others.
6. Unite your strength and join together, then you will have no difficulties.
7. The boundary of the two countries has not been fixed.
8. Every province is divided into prefectures and sub-prefectures; prefectures and sub-prefectures are divided, again, into sub-prefectures and magistracies.
9. A prefect, a sub-prefect and a magistrate are all territorial officials.
10. Never say that the officials can be trusted.
11. Kiangsi, Shantung, Shansi, Honan, Szechuan, are all names of provinces.

6. Hsiang lien, join together.

7. Wei ts'êng, has not.

8. 府, 州, 縣; Fu may be translated into English by Department or Prefecture, Chou by Sub-prefecture, Hsien by District or Magistracy. The description given in the text is a little puzzling, because there are two kinds of Chou, viz. the Chih-li Chou (直隸州) and the San Chou (散州), the former of which may be described as a slightly inferior Fu, and the latter as a slightly superior Hsien. Thus, the main divisions of China are Provinces; the divisions of Provinces, either Fu or Chih-li Chou; and the divisions of these are either San Chou or Hsien; but, while the Fu may be made up of either San Chou or Hsien, the Chih-li Chou is divided only into Hsien. There is another, less common, territorial division, called a T'ing (廳), which is ignored in the above description. This is very near to a Chou, and like it is of two classes. Every division and subdivision of a Province has a chief town bearing the same name as itself; and a translator has sometimes a difficulty in knowing whether the town or the territory is meant.

9. These are the titles given to the officials who govern a Fu, a Chou, a Hsien.

10. Ch'ieh wu, certainly do not; kuan fu, a Mandarin, an official; k'o shih, may be relied on.

(13) The great river of China, the Yangtse, is generally called by Chinese the 大江 or the 長江. Both 江 and 河 mean 'river', but chiang is more used in south, and ho more in north China. Chiang, again, is more confined to large rivers. But neither of these rules is absolute. (14) 上游, shang yu, and 下游 mean (1) up-stream and down-stream from any place, or (2) the upper and lower part of a river's course. (5) also to add [three more, namely] a Board of Trade, a Board of Education, a Board of Foreign Affairs, (6) and joining [these four] to the [still existing] Boards of Revenue, War, Punishments and Works, so make eight Boards. (7) As regards their order of precedence, — (8) one would give the first place to the Board of Trade and the second to the Board of Education. (9) The reason [for this is that], if mercantile affairs do not flourish, then it is impossible to stand up alongside of hostile nations; (10) and if a Board of Education be not instituted, then in the country there will be no ability worthy of employment. (11) Therefore [it is proposed] in addition [to the Boards already existing] to create a Board of Trade, and advance it to the first place; (12) and to establish as well a Board of Education, and advance it to the second place.

yüeh its name being called, nei pu, Interior Board. (5) Shang pu, Mercantile Board. (6) 合 to join [the above mentioned] to, etc.. (7) Lun reckoning, ch'i their, ts'ü hsü sequence and order, precedence. (8) Tsê then, i shang tu with the Board of Trade, wei ti i make number one. (9) Yü ti kuo with hostile countries, p'ing li stand up together. (10) K'an-yung-chih, worthy to be used. (11) K'u therefore, t'ien shê add and establish; chin chih, advance it. (12) Chia li, add and set up.

1. A certain man asked, saying, 'If the villagers all love a man, what then?' (2) The Master replied, 'That is not enough'. (3) 'If the villagers all hate him, what then?' (4) The Master replied, 'That is not enough: (5) it is better [proof], if the villagers who are virtuous love him, and those who are not virtuous hate him'.
2. Mencius said, (2) 'Benevolent words do not make such a deep impression on men as a reputation for benevolence. (3) Good government is not equal to good teaching in winning the people. (4) Good government, the people fear it;

1. 之 is used indefinitely, — him = any man; 何如, what as? = what do you think of? (Legge). (2) Wei k'o yeh, lit. not yet may: Chinese commentators expand the words into 'we may not on that account call him good'. (4) The commentators dispute whether here we should again supply 'call him good' or should say 'call him bad'. If one takes account of what follows, the first seems more probable. (5) Pu ju, [the two suppositions are] not so good as, or, not equal to; hsiang jên chih of the villagers, shan chê those who are virtuous, hao chih love him; 其不善者, ch'i ... chê those who, pu shan are not virtuous.

2. (2) Lit., jên yen benevolent words, pu ju are not equal to, jên shêng chih benevolent reputation's, ju jên shên yeh entering men deep: an expansion of the subject of the sentence is required in order to make the construction grammatical — 'The entering deep into men of benevolent words is not equal to, etc.'. (3) The construction here is the same as in the previous sentence — 'Good government is not equal to good teaching's winning the people'.

個 錢 一² 空 則 仁 不¹
 字。 六 文 虛。 國 賢、 信

1. Unless one trusts the benevolent and eminent, the state will be rotten.

2. [On] one 'cash' there are six words.

1. 賢, hsien, worthy, eminent; k'ung hsü, empty and void.

2. 文 here is a 'special numerative'; — an explanation of this term will be found a few lines below. 錢, a cash; this is the name given to the copper coins that in the past formed the only currency in China.

個, often written 箇, is a numerative. What this means, one can show more easily by examples than by definition.

In English, when speaking without reference to definite quantities or numbers, we say horses, knives, bread, sealing wax, etc.; but when we refer to definite quantities or numbers, though we say a horse, two knives, we may not say a bread, two sealing waxes, but must use some such expression as a piece, or a slice, or a loaf of bread, a piece, or a stick of sealing wax.

The Chinese, in their colloquial language, when speaking indefinitely, say horses, knives, bread, sealing wax, just as we do; but, when speaking with reference to definite quantities, not only do they say, a piece of bread, or of sealing wax, but they also say a piece horse, two pieces knives, or something such. The word thus inserted before a substantive is called by grammarians a numerative, or a classifier.

Besides ko, which may be described as a general numerative, there are also special numeratives, which are used only before particular substantives. Thus, — to take examples found in this Exercise, 一文 is used with 錢, cash; 件事 with 事, business, and with 文, documents; 隻 with 船, boats, with 鳥, birds, etc.; while ko is used before all substantives that have no special numerative, and to some extent, instead of the special numerative, before substantives which have one. Thus, for a boat one may say either i chih ch'uan, or, less elegantly, i ko ch'uan; for a cash, i wên ch'ien or i ko ch'ien. It should be noted that in expressions like a pound of meat, an acre of ground, pound and acre act as numeratives.

The use of numeratives before substantives, under the circumstances described, is universal in spoken Chinese. But in the written language numeratives before substantives are exceedingly rare. They are, however, found occasionally, as in this Example. They are especially employed, as in Example 7, before the word months. This is because the names of the months are the same as their numbers; e.g. ssü yüeh is the Fourth Month; therefore, when a writer means four months, he inserts a ko, and says ssü ko yüeh.

There are two more uses of the numerative which should be noticed: (1) it may be placed immediately after the substantive; e.g. in Example 3, 事件, affairs, affairs in general, not particularized; and in Example 4, 文件, documents; (2) it may be used without being attached to a substantive, as 隻 in Example 8 (3), (4), (11). Both these uses are common in the written language.

11. As regards the circumstances of the trade this year at our port, (2) comparing it [with] last year, there has been a slight falling off. (3) The causes of this were two. (4) One reason was that, at the end of spring and the beginning of summer, (5) the weather was exceedingly dry and hot, and every place was short of rain, (6) [so that] the great staples of local produce suffered no slight damage. (7) Although it did not become an [actual] calamity, it really was what had not been seen for the last ten years and more. (8) The other reason was that in the autumn, all along the coast, there sprang up swarms of pirates. (9) Moreover the said pirates were extraordinarily blood-thirsty: (10) they killed every one

4. Having concluded a treaty, one ought also to keep it.

5. In former days there were occasionally some who offended against this law: now, however, all observe it.

3. This sentence is worth a moment's close attention. The two words at the beginning, 與其, mean 'with the'; and the first six characters may be translated '[in comparison] with seeking for drugs after falling ill'. But this does not seem to fit in with the expression 不如, 'not so good as', which follows immediately after. The explanation is that pu ju, '[other things are] not so good as', has come to be used as an idiom meaning 'it is better to'. If pu ju be thus translated, the difficulty disappears. For pu ju, cf. Ex. 30. 1, and Ex. 32. 9(2). 自防, protect oneself.

According to treaty, all foreign goods going inland from a treaty port, and, if owned by a foreigner, native goods coming from the interior to a treaty port for exportation, may on the merchant's application be protected by a transit pass, and so freed from all liability to pay inland duties during their passage through the country; for which favour they pay an extra half duty at the port itself. really very few in number. (5) [After] closely considering [the matter], I think [the reason of it] is that, (6) since the railways have been opened for traffic, and goods are conveyed by train, it has become possible to escape the lekin. (7) This year there have been issued altogether five transit passes and no more; (8) and the goods for which passes were taken out were only of two kinds, timber and matches. (9) The half duties received amounted to Taels 105.4.6.9.

6. 據, according to. This is a word which often troubles the beginner. The literal meaning of the sentence is that the writer, chü, holds, has in hand, i.e. has received, kai yüan ping the said officer's report. But chü is a very conventional word, which need not be translated literally: it often is conveniently represented by 'according to', and sometimes it is best omitted entirely. (2) Notice the loose

Chiang-k'ou, (2) recently a great many soldiers collected together and would not disperse. (3) The said soldiers, relying on their numbers, created disturbances. (4) In every village and hamlet they beat the common people, extorted from them money, (5) robbed them of things, set places on fire: there was nothing that they did not do. (6) But as to the real circumstances of the case, I am not yet fully informed. (7) Besides giving strict orders to the local authorities, themselves to deal with the matter in earnest, (8) I must at once specially instruct a capable official to proceed with all speed to the said place, (9) and, having made careful enquiries, to furnish a report in accordance with the truth. 10. In the reign of T'ung Chih a certain high officer presented a memorial (2) [suggesting] that there should be established at the Capital a College of United Literatures; (3) [and this suggestion] was carried into effect, as is on record. (4) We now propose that, in accordance with the precedent of the T'ung Wên Kuan, (5) there should be established at Shanghai, also, a school for the spoken and written languages of European nations. (6) As regards expenditure of all kinds — (7) the officials and merchants of the place ought themselves to take measures to provide [funds]. 6. I would remark that the malpractices in famine relief are not only of one kind, (2) that the men who are guilty of them also are not [all] of one class. (3) I now propose to frame regulations for famine relief, so as entirely to get rid of the old abuses, (4) and to compel the deputies, at the time of distributing relief, (5) personally to see the men (i. e. the applicants) and personally to fill up the [relief] tickets.
7. Further, at this year's Provincial Examinations for Kiangnan, the scholars who entered the [examination] hall were all able to keep the rules of the hall; they were peaceful and abstained from malpractices.
8. We beg that there may be a monthly examination [of the students] in order to discover their diligence or idleness.

6. Tsai chên, calamity-relief. (3) Li ting institute, chang ch'êng regulations, chin ch'u entirely putting away, chi pi accumulated malpractices. (4) Tsê ling to hold responsible, wei yüan the deputed officers. (5) Jên the men, pi they must, ch'in k'an in person see.

(2) We would remark that, if the official students in the college can really study diligently with all their might, (3) they of course can make progress day by day. (4) But it will be necessary to find out by examinations at the time whether they be diligent or idle. (5) We now propose that, after the pupils have studied for the length of half a year, they should be examined once every month. (6) We also propose at the end of every three years to hold a grand examination, in which their order will be determined. (7) Those [placed] in the higher class will after due consideration be given official employment on probation. (8) Those in the lower class will continue the ordinary course of study; (9) and, when the time comes for the next examination, we shall again proceed to inspect [their progress].

7. We must devise a good plan, [by which we may] for ever obtain security, so that we may be able to dwell in peace.
8. Now, because we feel confidence in each other, (2) we are willing each of us to furnish capital [to the extent of] five thousand taels, and to form a partnership for trading purposes. (3) It is determined that at the completion of a period of one year we shall settle accounts together; (4) whether there be gain or loss, each man will acquiesce and acknowledge it. (5) In order that [our association] may continue perpetually, it is essential that we unite our efforts and be of one mind, and we must not be influenced in the least by our private interests. (6) Fearing that afterwards there may be no proof, we have now drawn up the above agreement, [of which] each man retains one paper (one copy).

7. Wu hsü certainly must, shê devise; pao ch'üan, security, (pao protect, ch'üan complete or perfect); shu k'o, and so may.

9. I have now received from the foreign firm of Messrs — — a loan of five thousand taels of Shanghai silver exactly. (2) It is stated explicitly that interest will be charged at the rate of 2 p.c. per month. (3) I am willing to give as security forty bales of foreign cottons belonging to myself. (4) It is determined that at the end of the Twelfth Month of this year the principal and interest shall be repaid in full. (5) If it should be that I overstep the limit, I will submit to [the creditor's] taking the cotton goods and selling them. (6) Should perchance it be that [the proceeds are] not equal to the principal and interest, the surety will make good [the difference]. (7) Fearing that afterwards there should be no proof, I specially execute this acknowledgement of the loan as evidence.

1. To carve words on stone.
2. Let "the Office for general control of affairs with other countries" be changed into "the Board of Foreign Affairs".
3. A merchant or private person of any nation, who proceeds into the interior, (2) whenever he arrives at a Sub-prefecture or Magistracy on his road, must present his passport for inspection; (3) and then it will be possible to send official servants to escort him in safety, till he leaves the district.

2. 衙門, yamen, is the ordinary name of the official residence and office of a Mandarin. The Chinese Foreign Office had formerly for its full title the eight words which come at the beginning of this Example, and was commonly spoken of, both by Chinese and by foreigners, as the Tsungli Yamen. It has now been changed into a Pu or Board, and is called the Wai Wu Pu, Board of Foreign Affairs. 着, cho, 'I order', is the word by which the Emperor expresses his commands, and is equivalent to 'Let'.

3. (2) Yen t'u, along the road; hu chao, passport, cf. Ex. 47. 11 (4). (3) Fang k'o then one can, p'ai ch'ai despatch servants, hu sung to protect and escort.

4. When the people of the country heard that the holy man had come, they all went to the sea-shore to meet him.

5. Women, when seeing off or receiving anyone, do not go outside the gate.

6. In the matter of an official communication. (2) I have received a despatch from the Tsungli Yamen saying, (3) the Inspector General of Customs has settled (4) that transit pass goods may be permitted to be sold [at places] along the route; (5) and that it is merely necessary to present the transit pass to the authorities for examination at that place, (i. e. at the place of sale). 4. Ying chieh, to meet and receive.

6. 爲...事; a Chinese despatch usually begins with a sentence of which the first word is *wei*⁴ and the last is shih, "on account of ... matter"; and between the wei and the shih there is inserted, sometimes a short statement of the subject of the despatch, sometimes, as in the present case, merely a couple of formal words. The words here inserted, chao hui, mean 'an official despatch', and have been adopted as the term for despatches between Chinese and foreign officials. Thus the four words mean 'concerning the matter of an official despatch'. (2) Chieh chun, I have received: chun is the word for acknowledging the receipt of a letter from an equal or superior, and is generally used without chieh; wên k'ai, a document saying.

(3) The Commissioner of Customs at each treaty port is called 稅務司, shui wu ssü, superintendent of duty matters; and the head of the whole Foreign Customs Service, the Inspector General at Peking, is known as the tsung shui wu ssü (Commissioner General). (4) Transit pass goods, i. e. goods protected by a transit pass, for which see Ex. 49; t'ing ch'i one may allow them, yen t'ü along the route, fa mai to be sold: or, 其 may refer to the merchants, the owners of the goods, and fa mai be active verbs, — to sell [the goods]. 1. The Emperor said, 'By means of the intercalary month fix the four seasons and complete the year'.

1. The Chinese year consists of twelve lunar months, and therefore is several days shorter than the solar year. To make up for this, a thirteenth month is inserted about once in every three years. This 'intercalary month', which is always introduced somewhere in the middle and not at the end of the year, takes its name from the month which it may happen to come after, e.g. if it follows the fifth month, it is called the intercalary fifth month.

members of mercantile firms to take notice that, (2) whenever they buy or sell goods, they must be sure to give or take ready money.

5. You ought to make it your most important principle to value your lives. (2) The things in the world are infinitely various; (3) and, of all of them that have powers of perception, there are none that do not value their own lives. (4) Man is the most intelligent of all things: why does he not value his own life? (5) Moreover, if you recognize the value of life, (6) then you ought to make plans to get a livelihood; (7) and, farmers, artisans, merchants and shopmen, all support yourselves by your own efforts.

in 行戶 is read hang (as in Ex. 58. 6) and means a firm — hang hu, merchants (cf. p'u hu in Ex. 56. 5). (2) Fan yü, whenever it happens that, = whenever; wu yao certainly must, hsien ch'ien [for] ready money, chiao-i trade.

5. Ju têng you, tang ought, i of, chung shêng valuing life, wei to make, ti i yao i the number one important (= most important) principle. (2) Wan yü, = yu wan, (a) have ten thousand, pu ch'i inequalities; or (b) are ten thousand in number and are not equal. (3) Lit., of all that have knowing and perceiving, none do not for themselves value their lives. (4) Observe this way of forming a superlative, — of all things the intelligent = the most intelligent. (5) K'uang ch'ieh, moreover; shêng chih wei chung, — notice the chih, 'life's being valuable'. (6) Mou shêng-chi, think about a scheme of living. (7) Tzû shih ch'i li, lit. feed themselves on their strength,

6. If all the people be virtuous, their country is sure to flourish: (2) if all the people be without virtue, their country will be sure to decay. (3) This principle is like the sun and moon passing through the heavens, like the rivers and streams traversing the earth; whether in the past or in the present, it is without change. (4) But, alas! at the present day (5) the scholars wish to be supported in idleness, the farmers wish for a reduction in their rents, (6) the traders wish to monopolize profits, the artisans wish to raise prices, (7) and the poor who have no regular livelihood wish to plunder and rob.

In the discussions of former times concerning [national] wealth and power, (2) men held agriculture and fighting to be the important points, and looked upon commerce and manufactures as insignificant matters. (3) But Europeans, when making plans for [obtaining] wealth and power, place manufactures and commerce first.
3. The war funds of western nations all come from duties on commerce. (2) Their merchants trade [with places] ten thousand li away, and make voyages across many seas, reaping the profits of foreign regions, whereby they support the people of their own land. (3) Therefore their country daily becomes more wealthy, and their army likewise daily becomes more powerful. (4) With Chinese merchants this is not the case.

(4) [But he who says so] does not know that in every western country though the railways are many, they were all made by degrees. (5) One has never heard of several lines being undertaken together.
5. [As to the behaviour] of European [nations] towards railways, — (2) if the founders can form a company, (3) then never mind whether they be some tens of men, or only a few men, (4) the state always gives its consent at once, and does not in the least hinder or hamper them. 1. It is my humble opinion, that, to give tranquillity to the people, one must first do away with hurtful things. (2) At the present day, [of all] the things in the world which hurt the people, (3) there is nothing worse than the clerks and official servants of the Sub-prefectures and Magistracies.
2. Disorder in the empire springs up in some one Prefecture, some one Magistracy. (2) The empire is an aggregation of Prefectures and Magistracies. (3) Therefore, in order to purify the source of disorder, one must begin with the Prefectures and Magistracies.
3. For the people must be free from danger of being killed, (2) and then they can concentrate their thoughts upon gaining a livelihood; (3) while the government must be without anxiety about brigands and rebels, (4) and then it can devote its mind to progressive principles.

4. I would humbly remark that, of the abuses in Yunnan, there are none greater than [those connected with] salt, (2) and, of the beneficial things in Yunnan, there are none more so than copper. (3) Now, the benefits [afforded] by the mountains and the sea, — if you throw them open to the public, they will be widely diffused and plentiful: (4) if you keep them private for the officials, they will be exclusive and scanty. (5) If you throw them open to the public, they may bring wealth to the country and enrich the people: (6) if you keep them private for the officials, they will result in harm to the people and injury to the country. (7) At the present time, in the Province of Yunnan, if you cause the penniless people to go into the mountains and mine for copper, (8) they will get money by selling the copper, and so will feed upon the natural benefits of heaven and earth; (9) and thus there will be profit to the people.  (2) Long Dragon Boats [must be] forty-one feet long underneath, and five feet four inches wide amidships, underneath.
 (3) Sampans, twenty-nine feet long underneath, and three feet two inches wide amidships, underneath. (4) Leading Sampans, a little longer and bigger. (5) For Long Dragon Boats, there will be provided large cannon, [to the number of] six pieces, [placed] forward, aft, and on the two sides. (6) For Sampans there will be provided two large cannon, one forward, one aft, and at the sides two small cannon, turning on carriages.
2. Cannon. — The large pieces [will weigh] a thousand pounds and more; the smaller pieces, also some hundreds of pounds. (2) The powder and shot required being a very large [quantity], it will be necessary permanently to provide an ammunition store.

The port of Wuchou, in accordance with a special clause in the Treaty, (2) was opened as a Treaty Port from the Fifth Month of the 23rd year of Kuang Hsü; and a customhouse was established for the receipt of duties. (3) The said place is situated on the north bank of the West River. (4) I calculate [the distance] to Hongkong and Canton, (5) [if] one proceeds by the water ways fixed by the Customs, as approximately 700 li. (6) At this port vessels coming and going have not yet met with any impediment. (7) In summer time large vessels, too, can come up to our port. 1. Of the rivers of Hupei, the Yangtse is the greatest, and the Han is inferior to it. (2) But the trouble caused by the Han is even greater than that caused by the Yangtse.
2. I would humbly remark that regulating the rivers of Kuangtung is a different thing from [regulating those of] the northern provinces. (2) In the case of the rivers of the northern provinces, the trouble is in the absence of embankments; but in the case of the rivers of Kuangtung, the trouble is in the number of the embankments. (3) The regulating of the rivers in Kuangtung, again, is different from what it is in the other provinces generally. (4) With the rivers of the other provinces, the trouble lies in their doing much harm and little good: (5) in regulating the rivers of Kuangtung, the trouble lies in the fact that they do much good, and harm then follows therefrom.

Leaving out of account the tsai ch'a at its beginning, at first sight one takes it to be a complete sentence with its subject, 船, verb, 應納, and object, 稅鈔銀兩, all in proper order: in reality, however, it is merely a participial phrase, of which the first nineteen words (rendered in the translation by the relative clause, 'which ought to be paid, etc.'), are attached like an adjective to the remaining four, shui ch'ao yin liang, 'sums in silver for duties and dues'. The construction would have been much plainer, and not in any way changed, if a 之 had been inserted after 應納. Further, this whole long phrase, which has been put at the beginning of the passage, as being logically its subject, is grammatically the object of the verbs 徵收, far away at the end of Section (2); though this is disguised in the translation by

1. The religion of foreign countries (Christianity) makes the opening of heaven its ruling principle, and makes equality its business, (2) makes saving the world its chief point, and makes justice its desire. (3) Now, exhorting men to be good is not compelling them to join one's religion; then Christianity should not be molested. (4) It is a benefactor of the world, and does no harm to men; then it should not be molested. (5) It cures men's diseases and sicknesses, and rescues them from calamities and dangers; then it should not be molested. (6) It increases men's knowledge and intelligence, and does not waste men's money; then it should not be molested. (7) Has the religion of Buddha such real merit? (8) Yet one does not hear of molesting Buddhists. (9) Has the

1. 宗, cf. Legge's Confucian Analects, I. XIII; this word tsung among other meanings has that of 'follow', 'take as one's master', and that is the sense in which it is used here; p'ing têng, level grade, equality. (2) Kung tao, just, justice. (3) Fu, now. Wu k'o nao; one may explain the use here of 無 instead of 不, by saying 'has not [any reason why it] may be molested'. (4) Yu kung, etc., lit. has merit towards the world. (7) Fo shih, Buddha; a surname with 氏 attached to it means the chief of that name or family, and so is used as a dignified title: thus we find 孔氏 for Confucius. (9) In Chinese the Mahometans are called 回回, and religion of Mahomet such real results? (10) Yet one does not hear of molesting Mahometans. (11) Why is it only the world-saving religion, which Europeans follow, that is molested? (12) Some one may say it is because they interfere in legal proceedings; (13) but he does not reflect that examination by torture is non-existent in foreign countries and flourishes only in China. (14) Under the instruments of punishment people are made to say yes to everything; (15) [and so] if one meets with corrupt officials and dishonest clerks, one must not expect them to give just decisions. (16) Therefore, that the strong should defraud the weak, that the many should tyrannize over the few, (17) that the bold should intimidate the cowardly, that the intelligent should cheat the stupid, has long become the common custom. (18) And so worthless gentry and local bullies select and devour the choice morsels and gobble up the common people. (19) All the malpractices that they indulge in are more than the pen can write, more than the fingers can count. (20) When he who is a missionary sees this state of things, how can he abstain from giving help? (21) If, indeed, he does not give help, (22) then what becomes of all his life-long talk about 'opening heaven', about 'equality', about 'saving the world', about 'justice'? (23) But, suppose China's method of trying cases (24) were to be just like the European system of providing juries and doing without examination

3. False reports which ought to be prevented. — (2) Recently at Peking, because the autumn manœuvres are soon to take place, (3) ignorant rascals have fabricated all kinds of false reports to excite and deceive the stupid people. (4) Persons who have some slight amount of intelligence, are well aware that the rumours are groundless; (5) but as to the very stupid people, it is most necessary to give them public notice, (6) so that they may not carelessly spread the reports.
4. Continued wind. — (2) Last month at Peking, from the 25th to the 30th, there was a high wind every day. (3) The flying sand cut one's face, and the people in the streets became fewer and fewer. (4) The weather also was extremely cold.

5. Instructions to deal with disorder. — (2) We hear that some time ago the government telegraphed to the Governor of Shantung, saying that, (3) as they had recently learned that the outlaw Chang of Shou-kuang (4) had again got together a number of adherents, and was inflaming and deluding the foolish people, (5) and moreover had posted up false notices, (6) making a pretence of hostility to Christianity, [but really] hoping to take advantage of the disorder and excite riots, (7) [therefore] they [the government] must beg [the Governor] to despatch troops, who would scour the country in earnest; (8) [they further desired him] speedily to order all his subordinate [authorities] to give special attention to the protection of the missionary chapels, (9) in order to guard against unforeseen dangers and avoid international complications.

3. Rejection of an application from Fêng-t'ien to have funds transferred for defraying the cost of opening ports. — (2) The Military Governor of Fêng-t'ien, Marshal Wang Tz'ü-ts'ê, (3) some time ago addressed a request to the Throne that the Board of Revenue should consider the question of transferring funds, (4) in order to meet the requirements of Fêng-t'ien in opening ports. (5) The Board has now decided that, (6) the funds in the treasury being insufficient, it is impossible to accede to the request; (7) and that the money requisite for opening the ports (8) ought to be provided by the said Province itself, etc., etc.. (9) It has replied to the Throne to this effect, and has been favoured with a rescript approving its decision.
